The company

BrandFace Media is a done-for-you short-form content agency based in Chicago. We build brands for ambitious business owners — content, paid ads, and automation systems that turn attention into revenue. Our focus for this landing page is law firms, though the company was founded serving a wider range of businesses before we specialized.

The founder is Bdo. Before starting the agency, he built a personal following of over 150,000 and generated 300 million+ organic views as a creator, with brand partnerships that included Red Bull, Apple, and Smart Water. That creator background is the foundation the agency was built on — we make content that actually gets watched because our founder spent years making content that actually got watched.

What we do

We handle three things for our clients.

First, we produce content. Fifteen pieces of short-form video per month, fully done for you: we script it, film it, edit it, and publish it across every relevant platform. Nothing about it is on the client's plate except showing up to the shoot.

Second, we run paid ads. Managed lead campaigns built on creative that actually converts, funnels engineered around the client's real case criteria. We start ad spend small — usually around $1,000 a month — so we can prove the cost-per-case before we scale it up.

Third, we build automation. Speed-to-lead systems so no lead ever goes cold, nurture sequences so nothing falls through the cracks, and intake workflows that chase down no-shows so the client's team gets their time back. This is the piece almost no other agency does.

Track record — company-wide

400 million+ views across all the brands BrandFace Media has produced content for.

The agency has worked with clients across personal injury law, real estate, medical practices, moving companies, urgent care, restaurants, and Shark Tank alumni brands. The lawyer vertical is where we've had the most breakout success, which is why the current focus is there.

Flagship case study — Demetrius McCloud, "The Legal Sniper"

Demetrius is a personal injury attorney and our longest-running lawyer case study. When we started working together, he had a small following and was known mostly within his professional network. Since then:

Over 7 million views across the content we've produced for his brand.

Nearly 30,000 new Instagram followers.

Thousands of inbound direct messages from people asking about his services.

A referral network so large that he refers out the cases he can't take, and those receiving attorneys refer cases back to him. The brand created an entire second lead channel that has nothing to do with a lead form.

Entertainment-industry clients on the side. He does more than personal injury, and the brand opened up a whole second vertical for him.

A virtual practice model that lets him travel and live his life while the brand keeps working. He operates without the traditional big-law schedule.

The relationship has become close over time. We understand his vision, he understands ours, and the work is built together rather than delivered to him.

Founder background — the personal injury connection

Bdo was personally a client of a personal injury attorney. He lived the exact experience a PI firm's clients go through — the accident, the intake, the case management, the resolution. That perspective shapes every piece of content and every intake workflow we build for lawyers. Most agencies pitch personal injury attorneys without ever having been on the other side of that phone call. We have.

The offer

Two tiers.

Authority Engine — $3,000 per month. This is the content-only tier. Fifteen pieces per month, fully produced and managed across platforms.

Growth Engine — $5,000 per month. Everything in Authority, plus managed paid ads and the full automation suite. Ad spend is separate from the service fee, controlled by the client, and prescribed by us based on their goals. Most firms start around $1,000 per month in ad spend.

The guarantee

In the first 90 days of the Growth Engine engagement, we guarantee a minimum of 10 qualified consultations — real potential cases, booked and tracked inside the client's own system — or we keep working, free, until they hit that number.

A qualified consultation is defined as a booked call with someone who describes a real, potentially takeable matter. Not a raw form fill.

The ROI math (nationwide, for personal injury)

Personal injury runs on a standard one-third contingency fee. That means:

A modest $25,000 to $30,000 settlement produces a firm fee of roughly $8,000 to $10,000. That single sign covers about two months of the $5,000 monthly service.

The average injury case an attorney actually signs settles closer to $77,600 nationally. That produces a firm fee of about $25,000 — roughly five months of the service, meaning one solid sign more than covers the full 90-day engagement.

A stronger case in the $100,000 range — surgery, fractures, longer treatment — produces a firm fee near $33,000, or about six to seven months of service.

The point we want to make: the client doesn't need volume to break even. They need one signed case.

Who this is built for

Ambitious lawyers — most often personal injury, though the system works for any firm where the founder wants to scale beyond themselves. The typical profile: currently generates most business through referrals or word of mouth, has tried at least one agency or software before and been burned, is the bottleneck in their own practice, and wants to build seven or eight figures without the big-law hours.

What separates us from other agencies

Most agencies work with anyone — a coffee shop this week, a roofer next week, a lawyer the week after. They never learn how a specific type of business actually grows, which is why lawyers keep getting burned by them.

Our current focus is lawyers. We know how a firm signs cases, where the money leaks in a practice, and what actually drives case volume, because we spend every day in that world.

The other differentiator is the automation layer. Most content agencies stop at posting. Most ad agencies stop at leads. We connect content, ads, and back-end operations into one system, which is what actually changes case volume.
